Note: Kutztown at 21% is unusually concentrated for a "top city" — likely reflects a personal/local network (school, hometown) rather than pure algorithmic discovery. True cold-stranger reach is probably a bit smaller than the raw follower count implies.

Key Takeaways (for content strategy)

1. Growth isn't

steady — it's one hit plus a
slow baseline.

Strip out

the Aug 18–
20 viral window
and TikTok's
real daily
average is 15K–
100K

views, not the
inflated
4.16M/28-day
figure implies.

2. You're being watched and
shared, not
talked to.

Comment-to-like
ratio is ~0.3– 0.4% on both
platforms
despite huge
share/save
numbers.

People pass
your content
along; they
don't stop to
type. If building
a

community/
coaching
business
matters, ending
videos with a
direct,

specific
question is the
lever most likely
to move this.

3. Evergreen
wins are your
psychology
content, not

your memes.

Videos

tagged

#zaetalks

#selfimprovement

are still earning

views 6+

months

after posting.

Prank/relatable-

meme content

spikes fast and

dies fast.

This validates

leaning further

into the

teaching format.

4. Your

audience

skews male

72–82%, mostly

18–34. Worth

checking

whether that's

who you want

buying UNMONI

TORED/

coaching, or

whether

framing/

examples are

unintentionally

coding male-

default.

5. Your best

"brand story"

content

underperforms

your best "brand

growth"

content. The

exposure-

ladder essay

post (your most

authentic,

mission-aligned content)
got 1,647
views; a low-effort viral post
got

3.7M. Growth
and mission-alignment aren't
the same lever
— decide

deliberately
which one a
given post is optimizing for.

6. What's not measured yet:

click-through
from bio link to
actual guide
downloads.

Views and
engagement
are vanity until they convert —

trackable link (Linktree
analytics, or
distinct short
links per
platform)

would answer
"which
platform's
audience
actually acts."
